JOURNALISM TODAY

What is being taught at the university level and what are the challenges?

Tuesday, January 14th

7 pm

Via Zoom, see link below

You won't want to miss this, as you have probably pondered these questions in your own thinking about today's current events. The answers will be addressed and yes, there will be time allotted for Q & A.

We will welcome our panelists: Dr. Karen McIntyre, assistant professor of journalism at the University of Oregon in Eugene and Patrick Schmiedt, journalism professor at Citrus College in Glendora, California. They will bring their expertise in the journalism field to inform and enlighten us all.

Please join us!

Dr. Karen McIntyre

In her role as an assistant professor of journalism, Karen McIntyre combines her passion for traditional reporting with her commitment to developing new approaches to how information is shared. Photo courtesy of Karen McIntyre.

Patrick Schmiedt

Teaches journalism in all its forms, media writing, journalism history, professional communications, social media, media literacy, mass communication, design, sportswriting, freelance journalism, blogging, and more.

On November 12th we had a very interesting program about a non-traditional career for women. Caitlin Bartlemay of Clear Creek Distillery told us about her personal journey to become a Master Distiller and about the workings of her distillery. She gave us some recipes for us to try using the products of her work. Clear Creek brandies are available all over Oregon.

Clear Creek became one of the first craft distilleries in the United States. Along with its portfolio of fruit liqueurs and brandies, including its flagship Pear Brandy, Clear Creek ignited the American Single Malt revolution in the early 1990s with its launch of McCarthy's® Oregon Single Malt. For more information, visit www.clearcreekdistillery.com.

OOL will be on vacation until next year.
Happy Holidays!!
